Dr. Jayne Morgan, head of Piedmont's COVID-19 Task Force, said she's been getting an alarming number of questions from people asking whether they should intentionally contract the virus and "get it over with" — something Morgan called "an absolutely terrible idea."

Ticking off added burdens to the healthcare system, the depletion of valuable medical supplies, and the risks of "long COVID," Morgan added, "This is not the time to take a risk like that with your life. You might be lucky, but you might not be."

Other panelists ticked off true stories of patients they'd watched die, at times unnecessarily. Dr. Supriya Manneppalli of Northeast Georgia Health System spoke of a young woman who was pregnant when she fell ill with COVID.

"We were able to save the baby by elective C-section but mom, after a prolonged battle, did not make it. What if — what if she was vaccinated? There are so many patient stories like that (which) stay with us," Manneppalli recalled.

Dr. Danny Branstetter, Wellstar's top infectious disease doctor, framed his portion of the briefing through the story of a real family that was destroyed by the virus. He spoke of a 70-year-old man who fell and broke his hip, caused by weakness while infected with COVID. His daughter, and then eight other family members all ended up becoming infected.

"This family, not unlike many others in our community, (was) relatively healthy ... all members eligible for vaccination, yet none received the vaccinations," Branstetter recalled. "That story has a devastating ending. That family no longer has three family members present because of COVID-19."

Some dogs do better in the shelter life but Smith is not one of them. He was in the shelter before Dr. Good adopted him and he remembers it too well. He is sad because he does not understand what happened. Smith is around 7 years old-the most perfect pup age. Smith is a big and beautiful boy with eyes to melt your heart and soul.
